History of Civic Day

Civic Day is a public holiday that is not based on any particular historical or religious event. The intent of the Civic Holiday seems simply to be to "not work".

The tradition of a holiday in the middle of summer in Toronto dates back to 1869 and was formally created in 1875 when the first Monday in August became the August Civic Holiday in Toronto.

British Columbia was the last province to establish an August holiday when British Columbia Day was created in 1974.

Though there will be regional variations, typically banks and government offices will be closed on Civic Day and public transport may run on a reduced schedule.

In Alberta, it is known as Heritage Day. The first Monday in August is an optional general holiday known as Heritage Day to recognize and celebrate the varied cultural heritage of Albertans.

Alberta Day

Alberta became a province on September 1, 1905. In recognition of this anniversary and in celebration of our province's unique spirit, culture and heritage, the Province has designated September 1 as Alberta Day.

Important Notice:

Garbage Pick Up

Dealing with trash is never easy, so lets be courteous and keep the weight of garbage bags down and clean up our garbage bins!

Thank you for your understanding and cooperation!
